Entrepreneurship in South Africa sucks

While 73% of adults in South Africa see entrepreneurship as a good career choice, and half believe they can start a business, only one in 10 (9.2%) go on to do so. This is according to the Global Entrepreneurship Monitor (GEM) 2015 Global Report, published this week.

Ghana Starts Africa's First High-tech Interactive Distance Learning

There are no computers, TVs or smartphones in many schools in rural Ghana. In the classroom, teachers talk while students listen. There's very little engagement and virtually no interaction, because many teachers themselves were not formally trained. The private, nonprofit Varkey Foundation — together with co-donor Dubai Cares and the Ghanaian Ministry of Education — wants to change that.

Want to be better leader? Observe more react less

Most time-strapped executives know they should plan ahead and prioritize, focus on the important as much as the urgent, invest in their health (including getting enough sleep), make time for family and relationships, and limit (even if they don't entirely avoid) mindless escapism. But doing this is easier said than done, as we all know—and as I, too, have learned during years of trying unsuccessfully to boost my effectiveness.
